No.1/September 2011

September 2011

SIMART SPENDING

TO PAY LESS AND BE REWARDED FOR EVERY DOLLAR SPENT Double dipping
Smart card strategy to maximize your loyalty points

Click for savings Tips and tricks for accessing great buys on the web

"Probably our top shopping tip is to learn

Bag bad habits Kristina Matisic share their saving tips on their hit show "Anna & Kristina's Grocery how to negotiate. This is not something people are initially comfortable

The mobile wallet New technology makes cash obsolete with a tap of your smartphone. Click for great deals

Navigate the web to save big on hidden online

The current economic climate is making consumers question their spending habits. Smart shoppers know that with a little strategy, they can have it all—and be kind to their wallets.

Positive change for your ou're home from the cottage (boo), the kids are back at school (yay) and your credit card bill just arrived (boo). Turns out your fun summertime activities had a hefty price tag. Now that September is here, families across British Columbia are focusing on the dreaded "b" word-budget-and getting back into money-saving mode.

One surefire way to make the most of your consumer buck is to join some of the loyalty programs retailers and service providers offer. Whether collecting points or redeeming them for movie tickets or flights abroad, Canadians are a loyalty-loving nation. In fact, the average Canadian actively participates in 8.9 loyalty programs, according to a recent study by COLLOQUY, a group focused on the loyalty marketing industry.

Reaping the rewards

■ There's a reason these programs are so popular. With families looking for more value as they spend, programs that reward your everyday purchases, such as gas and groceries, allow dollars to stretch further, says Kelly Hlavinka, managing partner at COLLOQUY. "It's money you're already spending, so loyalty programs that reward your core purchases really give you the biggest bang for your hard-earned dollars," says Hlavinka.

As shoppers reap the discounts and bonuses loyalty programs offer, retailers collect information about their spending habits. "Stores and brands know more about their consumers than ever before due to the data captured through participation in loyalty programs," says Hlavinka. "This delivers real value for consumers because retailers can then serve them better through more relevant offers, products and services."

There are also more than merely monetary advantages to joining loyalty programs. Today, more and more programs give members the option to contribute their points to charitable causes. "Consumers are looking for more meaningful brand experiences and are voting with their wallets for ethical companies that reflect their social and environmental values," says Hlavinka. "Donating [points] to charitable causes is an easy way to make a difference." With British Columbia's North Shore Credit Union, for instance, cardholders in its Choice Rewards loyalty program can donate points to the Canadian Cancer Society and the United Way of Canada's National Children's Initiative.

Alicia Androich Consumer and Business writer

MY BEST TIPS

Pick and choose Streamline your loyalty program cards down to a few favourites, plus a credit card that earns points towards the same program, to get the most value from points-earning purchases.

Keep tabs Earn rewards faster by collecting points at your favourite retailer, paying for everyday purchases with a co-branded loyalty credit card and taking advantage of in-store bonus offers. Also be sure to read the e-mails and mailings from your lovalty programs to cash in on your rewards so they don't expire.

A whole new level of savings opportunities There are also ways to save when shopping in the online world. Online flash sales offer discounts of up to 80 percent off retail prices on merchandise. The catch is these sales, which usually require you to sign up for a free membership, are over faster than you can say "click and save." For instance, the sales at Canadian fashion flash sale website The Peacock Parade only last two to four days. And, as with most flash sites, quantities are limited, so shoppers need to be quick with their credit cards—and keyboards. It's a small price to pay for, well, paying a small price. For families wandering the aisles of bricks-and-mortar stores, another shopping advancement has cropped up over the past few years. Thanks to encrypted wireless communication technologies that store credit card information, shoppers can swipe their mobile phone against a scanner to make payments in some retail outlets.This convenient "e-wallet" system eliminates the need to re-enter the stored data each time a shopper makes a purchase.

With all of these ways to spend money wisely and get more value from your purchases, it looks as if the "b" word isn't so scary after all.

SMART SPENDING 1ST EDITION, SEPTEMBER 2011

Responsible for this issue: Publisher: Candice Font candice.font@mediaplanet.com Designer: Penelope Graham penelope.graham@mediaplanet.com Contributors: Alicia Androich, Pauleanna Reid, Andrew Seale, Bob Spence, Patrick Sojka

justin.guttman@mediaplanet.com Business Developer: Josh Nagel

Photo Credit: All images are from iStock.com

Distributed within:

Vancouver Sun, September 2011 This section was created by Mediaplanet and did not involve The Vancouver Sun or its Editorial Departments.

www.facebook.com/MediaplanetCA www.twitter.com/MediaplanetCA

Mediaplanet's business is to create new customers for our advertisers by providing readers with high-quality editorial content "People continue to rate travel as one of the most important features of a rewards program. It's something people use to treat

-Tracy Hendricks, Vice President, New Business Development, American Express Ca-

Introducing the mobile wallet

As security systems on mobile devices improve, savvy marketing firms are restructuring loyalty programs and ushering in a new era of smart spending where your phone is your wallet.

Marketing companies offering mobilebased reward programs, check-ins and targeted advertising are becoming increasingly popular.

Take Paycloud for example. This application, a brainchild of Cleveland-headquartered SparkBase, lets users keep track of their rewards, points and freebies, and locate local businesses and the deals they have on.

"Paycloud is essentially a mobile wallet that eliminates a need for plastic loyalty cards," says John Heane, brand director at SparkBase. Heaney says that the average household belongs to more than 18 loyalty programs.

"Nobody wants to carry 18 cards—it's a mess," he says.

Heaney explains the company recently rolled out a pilot for the program that serves small to midsized-businesses in the Chicago area "with about 20 merchants participating."

"It actually exceeded our expectations," says Heaney. "We hoped that a couple hundred consumers would download it. We had 500."

Using existing technology

Unlike Near Field Communication technology that some marketing gurus have dubbed "the future of digital payments", Paycloud functions with existing point-of-sale (POS) systems. The merchant only needs a simple sensor dongle designed to interface with their existing system.

To activate loyalty points, customers approach the sensor pad with their smartphone.

On the business side of things, Heaney says "it gives another platform of [marketing] for the smaller merchants who don't have the drive or the resources to launch a large scale loyalty plan." SparkBase plans to slowly roll out Paycloud throughout the U.S. in October.

Benefits for both consumer and retailer

Carlo Pirillo, vice president of digital for Maritz Canada, a loyalty marketing company based in Mississauga, says his company has "a pretty intense focus on loyalty" in Canada.

He says Maritz is looking to utilize NFC technology to allow customers to pay for their products using their mobile devices.

"It's positive from a retailer's perspective because we're providing footfall traffic and there's no POS necessary," says Pirillo. "It also gives them a chance to dip their toes in the NFC waters."

He points out that although some businesses have been sitting on the sidelines waiting to see if the mobile wallet technology takes off, support is growing —it just may take a bit for people to get around to buying NFC capable mobile phones.

"It's interesting because everyone says NFC is four to five years off," says Pirillo. "The retailers are ready and the (next pieces) are the phones and mobile devices."

> ANDREW SEALE editorial@mediaplanet.com

Put your unused points towárds making a difference

Misunderstanding your loyalty reward options can result in unused tangible benefits.

However, by partnering with a charity, you can experience a feeling that money can't buy. Point donation is a popular alternative provided through loyalty reward programs, such as AIRMILES, to consumers who'd like to contribute bountifully to aid organizations like: the Red Cross, WWF, Kids Help Phone and The Special Olympics. "We believe we can make a difference in communities by focusing on protecting the health and well being of families and inspiring youth to realize their talents," says Debbie Baxter, chief

A little goes a long way

Donations are made online and with one click of the mouse, you can participate in corporate philanthropy by giving some or all of your points, which are equivalent to dollars, to a registered charity. This initiative has motivated consumers to band together for a great cause. "For example, when the earthquake hit Haiti, AIRMILES partnered with the Red Cross and collectors responded exceedingly well. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars were raised strictly through donations," Baxter explains. "The great part about this is that point collectors who choose to donate, will receive a tax receipt in the mail from their selected charity," she continues. The response to point donation programs has been well received and as corporations expand on nities for consumers to have choitheir reward options, the consumer market will continue to take

"We believe we can make a difference in communities by focusing on protecting the health and wellbeing of families..."

Cheif Sustainability Officer, AIRMILES

Matters of the heart

"We really believe that the opportuces are important and some are looking for this type of option, says Baxter." It is important to give as much as you have received. Corporations have created a lane for point collectors to benefit enormously with every purchase. By paying it forward to other organizations who are in need of supplies and products, each dollar adds up and unlocks a gateway for change. Consumers play a substantial role in the success of these kinds of programs and together we will make our nation a better place one loyalty point at a time.

PAULEANNA REID

editorial@mediaplanet.com

Switch for your ticket to ly when you

Fly Any Airline™

The new CIBC Aventura® World MasterCard™ Card

With the new CIBC Aventura World MasterCard, you can travel when you want with hundreds of airlines to choose from.

Earn 50% more Aventura Points at gas, grocery and drugstores to redeem for any type of travel or convert to Aeroplan^{®1} Miles².

Book with confidence knowing that 15 Day Travel Medical Insurance and Trip Cancellation/Trip Interruption Insurance (age 64 & under) are included3.

Apply today and receive a Welcome Bonus⁴ of Points

Conditions apply. Visit any branch, cibc.com or call 1 888 429-1141.

Applicants must meet income, other CIBC credit card criteria. 1 Earn 50% more Aventura Points at merchants classified by MasterCard as grocery store, service station or drugstore until total account purchases for the year (at these stores & elsewhere) reach $80,000. Ask for details. 2 Convertible in 10,000 Point increments. 3 Trav. Med. Ins. limited to primary cardholder age 64 and under (and spouse if also age 64 and under, and dependent children). All Insurances from Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance Company of Canada; pre-existing condition & other limitations and exclusions apply. Ask for details. 4 Welcome Bonus: applies to approved primary cardholder; awarded after first purchase; can't be combined with other offers; may not apply on transfers from other CIBC Cards; may be changed/withdrawn anytime. *\textstyle=1\textsup Aeroplan is a registered trademark of Aeroplan Canada Inc. CIBC is an authorized licensee of the mark. \textsup Norld MasterCard is a trademark of CIBC.

NSPIRATION

The co-hosts of "Anna & Kristina's Grocery Bag" regularly dole out money-saving tips and tricks to Canadian viewers. However, before they became shopping sages, they admit they had their own weaknesses.

Bagging bad spending habits—for good

LEADER TO LEADER

For their viewers across Canada and the U.S., Anna Wallner and Kristina Matisic offer product testing and practical, hands-on advice on smart shopping.

The co-hosts of Anna & Kristina's Grocery Bag and Anna & Kristina's Beauty Call on W Network and other channels (including The Oprah Winfrey Network, which airs the Grocery Bag), gained some of this insight on the front lines over the years—as shoppers. The award-winning journalists both worked on the news side at Global TV in Vancouver before launching their first advice program, The Shopping Bags, which aired for seven years on W Network.

Matisic admits she is a reformed impulse buyer and Wallner confirms that she experienced her share of purchase woes before she became a wiser consumer.

Both were asked in a joint interview for the most important advice they can pass on to shoppers. Here are their core points:

Break the impulse buying habit

If you are a habitual impulse buyer and it is causing havoc with your budget, switch to only using cash for impulse purchases rather than simply pulling out your creditcard, says Wallner.

Matisic agrees. Another tip she offers is to "give yourself time to think about the purchase." She doesn't buy on impulse any more. "If I am still thinking about it a week later, then I will go back and look at it again."

Pick the right reward program

"Once you get your spending under control" and are using a credit card that you are paying off each month, says Wallner, make sure your reward points really are a reward. "Look at your lifestyle. If you are not a frequent flyer, make sure the rewards program offers what you want." Some cards, for example, offer a wide selection of products you can obtain with

PROFILE

Anna Wallner & Kristina Matisic

Awards:-

Both (Kristina in 1997; Anna in 1999) were voted Broadcaster of Tomorrow by the BC Broadcasters Association, while working for Global TV, Vancouver:

■ Both have also won numerous awards for their two current TV programs.

points; others return a percentage of your spending back to you.

Many people with a credit card that has a good rewards program use that card to cover as many of their purchases as possible each month. You can use that monthly statement to see what you spent each month on eating out, purchases, etc., said Wallner. "The credit card statement can help you with your budgeting."

Learn how to negotiate

"Probably our top shopping tip is to learn how to negotiate," said Matisic. "This is notsomething that most people are initially comfortable with, but... it really helps make you a smart shopper."

"In the current climate," said Wallner, stores "are more willing than ever to negotiate. There are so many choices and so much competition today, it really is possible to get a better deal through bargaining." And it doesn't just have to be a price reduction you are bargaining for, point out both Matisic and Wallner. You can negotiate for free delivery as part of the purchase, or an added item. "If you are buying a bike," adds Wallner, "ask for a free basket."

Loyalty cuts both ways

It is also an advantage for smart shoppers to be loyal to specific stores and to befriend sales staff, said Matisic. For example, sales staff who know you frequent their store often and understand your needs and interests are more apt to go out of their way to tell you about an upcoming sale on something you collect or have been considering. "And such stores are more likely to negotiate with you when you are a regular customer," says Wallner.

BOB SPENCE

editorial@mediaplanet.com

Make sure they make it to class safely.

This school year, prepare your kids for the road with a BCAA Student Membership.

They'll be protected with the same Road Assist services as our Basic Membership like towing, changing flat tires, boosting batteries and opening locked doors. Rest easier this semester knowing they'll always be a phone call away from a BCAA trained technician who can help. Members, add a Student Membership for $51, non-members pay $87.25.*

Call 310-2345 (toll free), visit bcaa.com or drop by your nearest BCAA office.

*Prices exclude HST. Some restrictions may apply. Visit www.bcaa.com for complete terms and conditions. SPC Card is a registered trademark of Student Price Card Ltd.

FREE
SPC Card™ with a Student Membership

Patrick Sojka is travel rewards consultant and the CEO/ Founder of Canada's only travel rewards resource: Rewards-Canada.ca.

Find the perfect loyalty program

Canadians love their loyalty programs and retailers know this. That is why it seems like every retailer in Canada has a reward program. By using the following criteria, you can decide whether you should use a program or not:

Variety is best

Find a program that makes it easy to earn point/miles and offers a variety of rewards. Coalition programs with many partners are the easiest to earn with and typically have many reward options. The two biggest coalition programs in Canada are AIRMILES and Aeroplan.

Are you actually loyal?

Do you use a merchant enough that you will actually be rewarded? If not, then it may not be worthwhile to join the program unless they partner with a program you do use frequently.

Pick your prize

Does the program actually offer rewards that you would make use of? There is big difference between that free flight from an airline program and the free sub from the sandwich shop down the street.

$159.60 reg $228.00 glass canisters w/ measuring cup lids starting at $11.96 bird's eye view clocks $10.47 reg $14.95 each DHS bono mug w/o handle - 4 pc $59.20 reg $74.00 greenwich dining collection starting at $4.17 mayne tote $39.98 reg $79.95 tidal vases starting at $24.47 small side table $54.50 reg $109.00 carmel armchair - leather $629.30 reg $899.00 pg dot cushion $24.47 reg $34.95 penticton weekend bag $97.97 reg $139.95 lil' monkey (teak) $34.97 reg $49.95 bed tray $33.57 reg $55.95 DHS block lamp

$108.00 reg $135.00

left to right, top to bottom: cabana cushions - various sizes

starting at $14.98 bishop stools 2 & 3 $149.40 reg $249.00 monterey 2 seater - pebble $699.30 reg $999.00 allende large white pendant some conditions apply, see in-store for details, price valid until october 2nd 2011, while quantities last, sorry no rainchecks.

It's a perfect pair—teaming your loyalty card with a points-generating credit card doubles your rewards. And your bank approves.

WHY DOUBLE DIPPING IS THE NEXT BIG THING

A growing number of financial institutions are pushing their loyalty programs towards openended rewards that allow customers to choose where to spend their reward dollars.

According to a report issued by COLLOQUY an organization that collects data about the loyalty marketing industry, Canadians hold a total of 120.7 million memberships to the various loyalty programs.

That means about nine in 10 Canadians carrying 9 different membership cards.

Like our neighbours to the south, the Canadian loyalty market is driven by the financial services category, with active memberships up almost 20 percent, from 25.9 million in 2008 to 31 million in 2010.

Double dipping

Tracy Hendricks, vice president of new business development, rewards and strategy at American Express Canada, says "double-dipping", the use of a loyalty car in conjunction with a credit card attached to a rewards program, is a growing trend.

She says that smart consumers will pay with their co-branded credit cards attached to a reward program to earn points on all their spending while at the same time using their loyalty card to accumulate point towards the same program.

Even with an open-ended rewards program in place, Hendricks says the biggest market is still travel - one of the key markets for double dippers.

"People continue to rate travel as one of the most important features of a rewards program," says Hendricks. "It's something people use to treat themselves."

In Canada, both Air Miles and Aeroplan, two travel-related reward programs often linked with financial institutions, grew their active memberships with the former rising 5.3 percent from 9.5 million to 10 million and the latter reporting a stable active membership of four million.

Hendricks muses that the average consumer's favouritism towards travel rewards is likely, in part, because travel is something that takes a gre-

Vice President, New Business Development, American Express Canada

"People continue to rate travel as one of the most important features of a rewards program."

at deal of planning and budgeting prior to the trip. Often, travel rewards members will account for the amount of points they can use as part of their ticket in their initial budgeting. Although the concept of attaching travel rewards to a credit card may not be new, a growing number of financial institutions including AMEX use a system allowing the reward points to be used on travel with whomever the customer chooses.

"We really try to make our programs as flexible as possible," says Hendricks. "For us that means not dictating or determining where the customer decides to use their points."

The world's your oyster

Mike Henry, Scotiabank's senior vice president and head of Canadian retail payments, deposits and lending, savs the basic DNA of a rewards program is rooted in finding ways to compliment customers spending habits.

"The spirit is 'do what you already do and be rewarded for that'," says

Henry. He points out that although program such as Scotiabank's Scene card - which offers moviegoers discounts and perks - are still popular (Scene has over 3 million members with 1 million being Scotiabank customers) the real growth in popularity has been the common everyday spending rewards.

Programs that offer points that can be converted towards mortgage payments, groceries, fuel and medicine.

"We've seen a lot of broad appeal for that," says Henry. "Cash is king." And when all else fails, put your points on a gift card adds Hendricks.

"In the last year or so, we've seen an increase in (that)," says Hen-

She says she lacks the figures to show whether people are using the gift cards for themselves or as gifts but it seems to be a popular choice to help customers spend the money where they want to.

But with an endless array of loyalty programs tied to financial institutions fluttering around, does it benefit the banks? "If a customer likes your product then it means they'll spend more money on your card," says Hendricks. "It's a win-win situation."

ANDREW SEALE

editorial@mediaplanet.com

Be smart with your loyalty points

Question: How can you get more bang for your buck?

Answer: By joining a loyalty program and getting rewarded for every dollar you spend.

Although the economy remains unstable, Canadian consumers have stayed loyal to their favourite brands because of the alluring incentives provided by their loyalty programs.

According to the 2011 COLLOQUY Lovalty Census, loyalty memberships currently exceed just over 120 million nationwide—a jump of 3.9 percent since 2009. To meet the needs of consumers, retailers have enhanced their programs to maintain consumer relationships and set themselves apart from their competitors. This proposition has inspired Canadians to become smarter about the way they use these programs. Nathalie Genest, a spokesperson from Desjardins Financial in Montreal says, "Almost everyone with a credit card can accumulate points towards loyalty reward programs. It is a great way to save money also."

Cost effective methods

A percentage of your everyday purcha-

"Almost everyone with a credit card can accumulate points towards loyalty reward programs.

Nathalie Genest

ses such as grocery, pharmacy and restaurants charged to your credit card goes towards your reward program. "The problem is, not everyone knows how to use it in the best way, but there are many things that you can do with your

According to new research to be rewarded for loyalty.

firm COLLOQUY.

released eBay Canada, 86 percent of the population say that they deserve

Eighty six percent of Canadians program, while the average Canadian household is active in more than nine programs, according to Cincinnati-based loyalty-marketing research

■ Two in five (40 percent) men and women say they frequently join participate in at least one lovalty points," says Genest, who accumulates all her points for an entire year before redeeming them so that she has more compensation options available to her. "When I do redeem my points, I purchase financial services like RRSP, however loyalty programs to ensure they are getting value out of every purchase.

FACTS

Sixy four percent of Canadian ers who offer rewards programs.

consumers prefer to shop with retail-

Read more on the web:

www.points.com www.colloquy.com www.loyalty.com www.thepointsguy.com some people prefer to use their points to treat themselves and get show tickets or flights. Everyone uses their loyalty points differently depending on their lifestyle."

Take advantage of what you deserve

If you understand the benefits to participating in loyalty programs, your rewards are endless. For instance, IPSOS, an international market research company, recently surveyed 1,312 Canadian frequent business travellers who take advantage of their reward miles. The two key reasons why frequent flyers prefer Air Canada over all other Canadian airlines are the frequent flyer status and frequent z flyer points.

Aeroplan is the most sought after frequent flyer program in North America and allows travellers to earn points and redeem them for free flight tickets and other exclusive advantages such as: faster and smoother transfers, awards and travel upgrades. These opportunities have committed approximately ten million Canadians to this market with an increase of 5.3 percent since 2008. This statistic illustrates that as long as consumers are valued, long-term growth is attainable.

> PAULEANNA REID editorial@mediaplanet.com

Stay secure while shopping online

With transactions topping $15B a year in Canada, online shopping continues to be a popular way to beat crowds and find great bargains.

"The last thing consumers want to worry about when they're shopping on the Internet is the threat of fraudsters," says Caroline Hubberstey, director of public and government affairs at Interac Association and Acxsys Corporation. Here are a few easy steps to help you shop smart and stay safe:

■ Connect securely: Before you begin your online shopping, make sure you have a secure, password-encrypted connection and the latest security software installed on your computer. Avoid making online purchases through an unsecured or borrowed Internet connection.

■ Follow your instincts: While there are many legitimate online merchants, trust your instincts and avoid making a purchase over the Internet if you have concerns about a specific website.

■ Check the URL: Always type a merchant's website URL directly into your browser instead of clicking on a third party link (such as a link embedded in an email advertisement), which may be a phishing attempt directing you to a fraudulent website. Reputable merchants offer secure browsing, indicated by a "https" link or SSL certificate.

■ Read the privacy policy: Once you've selected goods or services to buy online, always check the small print. What is the merchant's privacy policy?

Will the merchant withhold any of your personal information? This should be addressed clearly on the website.

Save a record of the purchase: Print and file a copy of your receipt, as well as the merchant's terms and conditions, should you need to return the product or consult the warranty.

Courtesy of Interac Association and Acxsvs Corporation editorial@mediaplanet.com

DON'T MISS!

Derek Szeto Founder General Manager, RedFlagDeals.com

Click to cash in on online savings

Innovative online services such as group buying or "flash sales" are becoming increasingly popular as many Canadians prefer using the Web to find bargains and beat the crowds.

"The Web is much more interconnected today than a decade or so ago," says Derek Szeto, who founded Clear Sky Media, the parent company of RedFlagDeals.com, in 2000. With Facebook, Twitter and other online networking sites, individuals can quickly tell their friends about bargains they find online, generating more interest in such deals, Szeto points out.

Savings sent directly

There is a plethora of deal-of-the-day services now, from Groupon (www. groupon.com) to Vancouver-based Social Shopper (www.socialshopper. com) to WagJag (www.wagjag.com) to Red Flag's deal of the day. In case you're not yet familiar with this concept, group buying websites offer a heavily discounted service or product in your city for a limited time only.

Once you sign up, emails arrive in your inbox every day about bargain deals for everything ranging from horseback riding lessons to laser hair removal and deep acupressure massage, to golf lessons and restaurant deals, with discounts up to 80 percent.

Discounts at your fingertips

Earlier this year, Red Flag Deals started offering online links to not only its own deals, but those offered by some of its competitors, says Szeto. Red Flag, he said, is designed to become "the go-to destination for Canadian deals." It is offering information to online shoppers as a deal aggregator, says Szeto, allowing browsers to take advantage of more of the unique deals available on the Web.

Instant affordability

"Flash sales" have also become popular-especially amongst fashionistas looking to buy designer-label fashions at discounted rates of up to 70 percent off. You sign up for free to become a member and receive email alerts tipping you to a limited-time "flash sale." Prominent designers with excess product (sometimes including the previous year's) sell these through a flash sale website rather than through discount outlets that they do not want their designer products in.

B.C.-based Anna Wallner, co-host of two Anna & Kristina TV programs providing advice to shoppers (see separate story in this special section), said flash sales can provide real bargains. "Websites like www.hautelook.com are a great source for flash sales."

Sandra Kahale, a Toronto-based communications professional, also likes the special offers. "Once I discovered flash sales websites, I signed up at three of them and have had a lot of fun picking up designer fashions at a fraction of what I would have paid at an upperscale store. I owe the friend who told me about them a really, really good night The newest Canadian flash sales site, www.thepeacockparade.com, was just launched in July. Among the many other flash sales sites are www.prive.com and www.beyondtherack.com. If you end up liking an American flash sales site, make sure it delivers to Canadaand at a cost that will not eat up all of vour savings.

BOB SPENCE

editorial@mediaplanet.com

Limited-Time Offer

Apply by October 8, 2011 and qualify to receive after your first qualifying transaction! That's 10,000 more points than our previous offer.

= 4 points^A per $1

Visit morerewards.ca/sun for details.

© 2011 MBNA Canada Bank

^{††} This is a one-time offer for new More Rewards credit card cardholders, or existing cardholders who qualify for an additional account. To qualify for this offer, an online or telephone application must be received no later than October 8, 2011 and mail applications must be received by no later than October 24, 2011 and cardholders must be approved and use the account for at least one qualifying purchase or cash transaction. 25,000 bonus points will be earned after the first qualifying transaction. To earn an additional 10,000 bonus points, cardholders must complete their first qualifying transaction by February 28, 2012. Please allow 8-10 weeks from the first transaction date for the bonus points to be posted to the account. Limit one-time 35,000 bonus point offer (no cash value) per new account. This promotion is offered by MBNA Canada Bank and may be cancelled at any time without further notice.

A Cardholders will earn 3 More Rewards Points for each qualifying $1 in net purchase transactions charged to their More Rewards credit card account pursuant to the terms and conditions of the More Rewards credit card program (the "Program"). Please refer to the terms and conditions of the Program for conditions, limitations and restrictions. Cardholders will be eligible to earn 1 additional More Rewards Point for each qualifying $1 in net purchase transactions by presenting their More Rewards loyalty card when making their purchase with their More Rewards credit card account. Please visit www.morerewards.ca for the More Rewards Rewards Rewards Program terms and conditions including expiration of points and items that are excluded from earning points. MBNA Canada Bank is not responsible or liable for any aspect of the More Rewards Program or the use of the More Rewards

MBNA Canada Bank is the exclusive issuer and administrator of the credit card program described in this advertisement. MBNA, MBNA Canada Bank, Platinum Plus, CreditWise and the MBNA logo are all registered trademarks of FIA Card Services, National Association, used by MBNA Canada Bank pursuant to licence. MasterCard and PayPass are registered trademarks of MasterCard International, Incorporated, used pursuant to licence.